

Falling Through Time

36 6 5

Chapter 1 by .l.a.

It started as a dream, a wonderful one. I was walking with my best friends in the world, in the clouds. It started to rain, and we all fell out of the sky, falling a thousand miles an hour to the earth, and when we hit, we were back in time. Except that now we weren't dreaming. We were actually in 1774.

Chapter 2 by nighteye

Thump.

A girl's eyes shot open, the only light in the moonless night.

Scrabbling.

There was something outside. A squirrel, or a raccoon, maybe.

Crunch, crunch, crunch.

No. A person.

She laid absolutely still. A single movement could alert them to her presence. Only a thin log wall separated her from the person outside.

More footfalls.

Not one person. but several. She held her breath.

They knocked on the door. Her mother would get it. She prayed the people wouldn't hurt her. Sure enough, she heard the creak. She heard the door creak open.

What came next was unexpected. "Who are you?"
